= THE IMMIGRANT WAR

An average of two coffins arrive at the international airport of Kathmandu every day. They are bringing back the corpses of Nepali migrants who went to work in the Middle East or in the Persian Gulf. In the Americas, about 2,000 people have died trying to cross the border between Mexico and the United States in the last ten years. As for those who have tried to reach Europe from Africa and the Middle East across the Mediterranean, it is estimated that at least 20,000 people have died since 1990.

These are not the numbers of mere accidents, these are the numbers of an actual war: a war against immigrants.

And the conflict does not relate only to the undocumented nor does it stops at the borders. Even when migrants succeed in obtaining a legal work permit, pulled by the labour demand of richer countries, they are still faced with violation of core rights.

But how sustainable is the current migration system in the long term? How can we manage migration realistically, giving people both dignity and safety? The migration question has certainly not been resolved by militarising borders further or by reducing visas and permits.

The global phenomenon of contemporary migration cannot be left to the decisions and solutions of individual states. The only concrete, immediate alternative to further exploitation and violation of human rights is genuine grassroots organising by migrants.

STOP THE NET GRAB

The World Conference on International Telecommunications may have ended in disarray following a walkout by the US delegation but the internet as we know it is still at risk.

The International Telecommunications Union (or ITU), a United Nations agency, is planning to adopt new rules to clamp down on the fundamental freedoms of citizens online. Unless we act now, our right to freely communicate and share information could change forever.

This is why Equal Times has launched the Stop the Net Grab campaign to ensure that the internet remains an open resource for everyone around the globe.

Read our special report and join our global petition to help ensure that the internet remains free for all.
