'Starting out from the actor and not from the product'

Europe is investing considerable resources in the development of a greener future, in the achievement of sustainable and inclusive growth for EU 2020, and the scale of this effort is liable to create the impression that 'green' is to be interpreted as meaning 'better'. Yet such an assumption might be somewhat misleading, for the shift towards a greener economy must be seen to entail demonstrable support for human labour.

Learning to be green: future skills for green jobs

At this workshop co-organised by Cedefop, the EU agency for training and skills, and the European Parliament, which took place in Brussels on 29 September, the agency's recent report on green jobs was presented and it was discussed how the move to a low-carbon economy is affecting the demand for skills. According to the ETUI special attention should be paid to the creation of quality jobs based on a dynamic employment policy and social protection.

ETUC participates in the Ministerial Conference on 'Green Jobs'

During the ministerial conference 'Promoting green employment: a major and indispensable driver behind a successful transition towards a competitive low carbon economy' organised by the Belgian Presidency of the Council of Europe on 28-29 of September in La Hulpe, Brussels, the ETUC affirmed that all sectors are concerned for greening the economy. Anne Panneels, ETUC advisor, emphasized that the question should rather be: how to ensure a just transition to green and at the same time good quality jobs?

ITUC: World Day for Decent Work 2010

3 messages were put forward during the 2010 edition of the World Day for Decent Work: growth and decent jobs, not austerity, are essential to beating the crisis and ending poverty; quality public services are essential for a decent life and must not be slashed in the name of fiscal consolidation; and, the financial sector must pay for the damage it has caused and be made to serve the real economy and real human needs.

Workshop on climate change, its impacts on employment and labour markets

The workshop held in Brussels, was organised by the Global Union Research Network (GURN) and coordinated by the ILO's Bureau for Workers' Activities (ACTRAV) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). The aim was to discuss academic research on the employment aspects of climate change and identify research gaps that would help the global trade union movement in its efforts to build cohesion.

The Council adopted conclusions on the EU position for the Cancun climate conference in Mexico

The EU expects the meeting to adopt a balanced set of decisions that contribute to establishing an international regime to protect the climate after 2012. The Council reiterated its preference that this should take the form of a single legally binding instrument. At the same time, it confirmed its willingness to consider a second commitment period under the Kyoto Protocol if this were part of a wider outcome including the perspective of a global framework engaging all major economies.
