Are we witnessing the end of development cooperation?
Are the emerging donors and the private sector taking over?
What will the role of NGOs and bilateral cooperation be?
What does it imply for my own organisation?

About the 11.11.11 Research Chair Development Cooperation

In April 2011, HIVA launched the 11.11.11 Research Chair Development Cooperation as a unique cooperation between the academic world and Flemish NGOs, represented by the umbrella organization 11.11.11.

International seminar on the future of development cooperation

Leuven, Belgium, 16 February 2012

HIVA initiated an exploratory research into the future of development cooperation (2020), using the technique of scenario planning. Co-facilitated by experts from Normann Partners, HIVA took a group of policy makers, practitioners and experts through a process of reflection and analysis about emerging trends, and what they could mean for global development. The outcomes of this process will now be presented and discussed in an international seminar through a mix of presentations, workshops and debate.

Practical information & registration

"There is no longer a single model of development cooperation,
and no single model of development cooperation. There are many models of development cooperation,
and many of them are very different."

"Developing the capacity of the state to manage its resources effectively. And for many of the countries in which we work,
the capacity to manage its resources is very low."
