SOLIDAR Weekly Round Up 31-10-2013

Editorial by Conny Reuter

Red Line, Not Red Tape

The last European Summit, which took place on 24-25 October, was “interesting” - like the Americans say if they do not like something too much. For several reasons: firstly, that people continue to die crossing the Mediterranean Sea in an attempt to reach the continent of hope, freedom and prosperity at any price, even at the price of their life. But the Summit did not decide on anything concrete and left the countries on the borderline, like Italy and Malta, alone.

Secondly, the Summit took place at the same time as the news was confirmed that the German Chancellor’s phone was monitored which excited media and public opinion. But the Summit missed the opportunity to protect the privacy of millions of European citizens whose communications are collected by the National Security Agency (NSA) and others. Monitoring Progress on Freedom of Association, Decent Work and Social Protection: Algeria, Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Morocco, Palestine and Tunisia

Last week SOLIDAR shared country reports monitoring progress on freedom of association, decent work and social protection in Algeria, Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Morocco, Palestine and Tunisia with the European Commission and the European External Action Service. These reports were developed in close cooperation with civil society organisations, trade unions, think tanks and progressive political forces from the Middle East and North Africa.

The reports highlight two important trends: firstly, that governments are putting in place measures that limit the rights of 'actors for change' to associate and peacefully assemble, and secondly, the steady growth of the informal economy, deficient social protection systems and a lack of decent work. Read our recommendations to counteract these trends and address these developments in the upcoming European Neighborhood Policy (ENP).

Film & Debate: Workers' Rights in Pakistan

Everyday, big companies are sending products made in developing countries like Pakistan to Europe. But what is the situation of the workers in these countries? Join us on 13 November for an inspirational event and discussion with activists and filmmakers on how civil society organisations around the world can improve workers' rights and working conditions and how cinema can be a tool to promote social justice and decent work for all.

Director Ammar Aziz, award-winning documentary filmmaker and activist based in Lahore, will introduce two of his documentary shorts, which were produced together with SOLIDAR partner in the Global Network, Labour Education Foundation, who were awarded with a SOLIDAR Silver Rose in 2011.

European Semester: Concrete Actions Needed to Spur Social Progress

Last week (24-25 October), the European Council approved the Commission's Communication on the social dimension of the Economic and Monetary Union (EMU) calling to reinforce the monitoring of employment and social developments as part of the macroeconomic surveillance within the European Semester.

SOLIDAR welcomes the fact that the issue of reinforcing the social dimension of the EMU has been put on the agenda of the Council meeting. However, we call all the institutions involved in the policy coordination process of the European Semester to give due attention to the so-called "social dimension" in order to make progress towards social cohesion and prevent increasing inequalities and long-term exclusion.
