Dear Friend,

72 men and boys, some as young as nine, slaughtered.

A father watches helplessly as his son is shot in the leg, and then brutally killed with a machete. He has no choice but to keep running, leaving his son's body behind. This is the harrowing reality of life in the rural villages of the Central African Republic.

While French and African Union peacekeepers protect the larger towns of the Central African Republic—a country embroiled in brutal sectarian violence—Human Rights Watch research uncovered a devastating truth: no one is watching the places that lie in between.

The financial support of our members allows Human Rights Watch to go where no one else does, so that we can protect those who fall through the cracks, and direct global attention where it's needed most.

Research isn't easy.

It's nuanced and challenging. It demands countless hours of work by trained experts in the field. And it's expensive: visas, satellite communications, translators, and travel to remote areas all come at great cost.

But our research helps save lives.

We have proven this time and again. And now we are asking you to stand with us. Help us protect victims, and work to give voice to those who need it most.
