Witness: Her Grandson Executed by Congo Police – Jeanne's Story

One night in 2013, Jeanne was awakened by pounding on the door of her home in Kinshasa, capital of the Democratic Republic of Congo, she told Human Rights Watch in a soft, sad voice. When she asked who was there, the men outside yelled "Police!" They broke down her door and rounded up all the men in the house and beat them, but let them go once they found Jeanne's 19-year-old grandson, Joseph, whom Jeanne had helped raise. They dragged her grandson outside the house, shot him three times in the chest, and left him dead in the avenue, covered in blood.

Last November, Congo's government began "Operation Likofi" – "iron fist" or "punch" in Lingala, one of Congo's languages. The police operation was aimed at ending a surge of armed robberies and other crimes in Kinshasa by members of organized gangs known as kuluna. Kuluna who commit crimes should be arrested and brought to justice. But Operation Likofi did not enforce the law in Kinshasa but instead reinforced a climate of fear.

In Indonesia, 'Virginity Tests' for Female Police

The Indonesian National Police's use of "virginity tests" is a discriminatory practice that harms and humiliates women. Police authorities in Jakarta need to immediately and unequivocally abolish the test, and then make certain that all police recruiting stations nationwide stop administering it.

Dispatches: Greece - No Excuse for Caging Children

By Eva Cossé

Is it acceptable for children with disabilities in institutions to be kept in caged beds because of a shortage of staff to supervise them? As shocking as it may sound, for the government of Greece the answer appears to be yes.

US Summarily Deports Parents of American Children

Each year, the US is summarily deporting tens of thousands of migrants who are crossing the border to be with their American children. If President Obama is serious about protecting family members who live in fear of deportation, his executive action should stop summary deportation and punishment of border crossers with families inside the United States.
