

Call for papers

International Critical Thought (ICT), an English-language quarterly hosted by the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and published by Routledge in UK beginning in March 2011, is now calling for submissions.

The journal comes up as a response to recent developments that have crippled the capitalist regime and led the world to an era of fundamental change. It aims to serve the Marxist and leftist scholars in their reflections upon the past and inquiry into the future, with an emphasis laid on the coalescence of social concern with academic rigor, and bettering of the reality through better understanding of it. As a 21-century forum, ICT goes along with cultural diversity and intellectual openness, and is most willing to facilitate dialogues not just within the left community but also between the left and other social thoughts. As a journal based in China, it also lends an extra attentive ear to the developing world experience, for instance, the discussion on what China's rise means to the world in general and the world socialism in particular.

As a publication outlet for the leftist scholarship across the world, ICT welcomes studies in various academic disciplines employing different research tools. We also welcome contributions in other forms other than original article, such as book review, interview, and the review of a conference, organization, periodical, and event that can be generally categorized as leftist.

The length of contributions may vary between 2,000 (for book review for example) and a maximum of 8,000 words (for original articles), and follow the Chicago Manual of Style in writing and citation. To have a better idea about the journal, you may check the sample issue online at <http://www.tandfonline.com/rICT>, which also contains the journal information such as a description of its aims and scope, the editorial board, etc. For further information and the guidelines for contributors, please contact us via email directly to Dr. Gao Jingyu at gaojycass@163.com or at ict@cass.org.cn.

We look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely yours,

Cheng, Enfu (Chief Editor, Chinese Academy of Social Sciences)
 Schweickart, David (Chief Editor, Loyola University Chicago)
